THE LOWITJA INSTITUTE TACKLING INDIGENOUS HEALTH ISSUES

Interview with PAT ANDERSON, Chair of the Lowitja Board, ABC Radio Australia, Pacific Beat, 2 March 2012

'… the Lowitja Institute is built on almost 15 years of Aboriginal involvement in setting a research agenda that is relevant, that does relevant and useful research. All those Boards [the Cooperative Research Centre (CRC) for Aboriginal and Tropical Health, the CRC for Aboriginal Health and the CRC for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health] have been led by an independent Aboriginal Chair and the majority of Board members have been Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander, that is a little bit unusual in this country. [Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people] set the agenda… then we look for people that have expertise in the field… so it's a little bit different from the more traditional way of doing research…'

RESEARCH AT THE LOWITJA INSTITUTE

The Lowitja Institute is excited to be contributing to a major ongoing project led by Professor Michael Good from the Institute for Glycomics at Griffith University.

The long-term aim of the project is to develop a Vaccine for Group A streptococcus (GAS). This bacterial pathogen that is responsible for a number of diseases. These range from sore throat (streptococcal pharyngitis) and skin sores (pyoderma), through to more serious invasive infections (necrotizing fasciitis). However, the post-infectious diseases of rheumatic fever (RF) and rheumatic heart disease (RHD) are of the most common concern and responsible for the majority of GAS-associated deaths globally. GAS diseases account for approximately 500,000 deaths each year globally.
